

We all care about the environment, but passing legislation like the Warner-Lieberman Climate Change bill will have very little effect on global warming. However, the effect on a struggling economy would be devastating. You have heard and will continue to hear Democrats talk about the unemplo...

We all care about the environment, but passing legislation like the Warner-Lieberman Climate Change bill will have very little effect on global warming. However, the effect on a struggling economy would be devastating.

You have heard and will continue to hear Democrats talk about the unemployment rate and the need to pass extended unemployment benefits; all the while they will attempt to pass economy killing legislation.

They are either severely misguided in their judgment or this is just part of their plan to move everyone over to a government sponsored society.

THE ECONOMY

Chilling growth to counter global warming

Those urging Congress to pass the Lieberman-Warner bill say it would slow global warming by capping carbon dioxide emissions. However, many studies — from Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Charles River Associates, The Heritage Foundation, even the Environmental Protection Agency — predict severe consequences in higher energy costs for the U.S. economy and consumers. In 2025 alone, Heritage's study concluded, Lieberman-Warner would cost the nation at least 500,000 jobs and cut economic output by at least $125 billion — for little to no environmental benefit. The forecast by region:

